

Jean Cecil Frick

Young leaders charging to meet the high-priority needs of Palmetto Health Cancer Centers.

Each year, more than 1.5 million new cases of cancer will be diagnosed. This is a disease that affects each one of us and it's important that we have cutting-edge resources to treat cancer right here in the Midlands.

During my senior year of high school in Spartanburg, my mother was diagnosed with stage IV cancer. She had to spend several days away from home each month in Atlanta receiving treatment. This experience taught me the importance of having life-saving cancer treatments in the communities where we live and work. It allows you to receive the indispensable support you need surrounded by family and friends.

In order to carry on my mother's legacy, I am committed to making sure others have the opportunity to receive the treatment they need in their own community. Now that the Midlands is my home, I have found that community of support through The Cavalry and the Palmetto Health Foundation.

PalmettoHealthFoundation.org/TheCavalry